

Biography

Erin M. Shea is an attorney with the Indianapolis law firm of Riley Bennett Egloff LLP.

A summa cum laude graduate of St. Mary's College in Notre Dame, Ind., Erin has undergraduate degrees in Psychology and Sociology (double major). These areas of study gave Erin an insight into human dynamics and a sharp analysis of social and institutional structures. This perspective is something she carried with her into law school as well as her legal practice.

As a student at the Indiana University Maurer School of Law, Erin had the opportunity to hone her legal skills as a student intern with the Conservation Law Clinic during her 2L year and as a TA for the clinic during her 3L year. Erin assisted with researching and drafting House Bill 1557 which the Indiana General Assembly passed and was codified as Indiana Code § 14-23-6.6.

The bill expanded a training program for prescribed burning through the Indiana Department of Natural Resources (DNR) and set the requirements and standards of liability for individuals conducting prescribed burns. The legislation was designed to encourage the use of prescribed burning as a land management tool.

Erin was also on the Indiana Law Journal. During her 2L year, she was an associate on the journal, and during her 3L year, she served as a managing editor.

In addition to her work with the Clinic, Erin was a student law clerk with RBE the summer prior to her 3L year. During her clerkship, Erin assisted with numerous matters and developed an interest in a range of practice areas.
